

Raise North Carolina Talking Points

The North Carolina Department of Health and Human Services is launching the Raise North Carolina public education campaign about the value of the state’s early care and learning network. Led by the Division of Child Development and Early Education (DCDEE), the campaign shows how greater support and investments deliver positive outcomes for children, families, and North Carolina’s economy. Investing in early childhood education helps us all Raise NC.

This document is intended to help teachers, parents, organizations, advocates and others communicate the value of North Carolina’s early care and learning network. The Talking Points can be used to prepare for speaking or writing to families, constituents, partners, policymakers, business leaders or the media. Choose points to support a specific goal and/or address a specific audience.

Policymakers

The pandemic has put the focus on an economic recovery that cannot happen without rebuilding and strengthening our early care and learning network. Policymakers can help Raise NC by keeping the network strong and providing greater access to families.

- The Federal Government prioritized addressing the early care and learning crisis caused by COVID-19 as part of the American Rescue Plan Act (ARPA), releasing $39 billion to states, territories, and tribes in April 2021 to stabilize the network.
- Understanding the vital role early care and learning plays in the state’s economy, the North Carolina General Assembly quickly accepted and approved the use of critical federal aid, and Governor Roy Cooper announced a historic, one-time federal $805 million investment in North Carolina’s early care and learning programs paving the way for a strong economic recovery.
- North Carolina Child Care Stabilization Grants made possible by funding from the 2021 American Rescue Plan Act, support working families with access to high-quality, affordable child care. The grants also help early care and learning programs with recruitment and retention, enabling them to provide better wages and benefits to teachers, and promoting equity for all—children, parents, and teachers.
- Emergency COVID-19 federal funding has helped struggling teachers keep the doors open, but without increased, sustained long-term investment, many fear the approaching end of short-term funding may also mean the end of their programs.

- North Carolina recognized the importance of early care and learning decades ago and built a high-quality network that serves parents and the state’s economy. It is the envy of other states in the nation, but it can’t be taken for granted. The early care and learning network needs continued investment to help families raise North Carolina.
- Our state’s high-quality ECCE system produces better education, health and economic outcomes for children and the state. It consistently puts us ahead of others and we need to continue to invest in keeping it strong.
- It is a model for the nation—and essential for North Carolina’s economic recovery—especially because the availability of high-quality early care and education is a major factor in attracting businesses from around the world to bring jobs to North Carolina.
- Early care and learning works for children and the state.
 - o Early care and learning teachers work in collaboration with schools, pediatricians, public health officials and state agencies to ensure that families with young children have the resources they need for the healthy development of their young children.

- o NC Pre-K prepares children for success in school, making sure children have the literacy, math and behavioral and social-emotional skills they need before they enter kindergarten.
- o Children who have experienced NC Pre-K have higher third grade reading and math test scores than peers that didn't attend NC Pre-K.
- o Unfortunately, our great early care and learning network serves too few children. If all who needed it had access, we could raise North Carolina. Early care and learning costs exceed many families' ability to pay. Dual income NC households with two young children spend on average 16.8% of their income on early care and learning, while single income NC households with one infant spends 38.4% of their income.
- o Only half of eligible children are enrolled in NC Pre-K due to lack of state funding. Nearly 33,000 eligible children per year are unserved.
- o State support to counties does not meet the cost of providing critical services to families and children. Annually, counties receive on average $5,450/NC Pre-K slot while a 2017 study showed the cost is about $10,000/slot per year.
- o The profession struggles with low salaries, no benefits and little access to professional development to advance themselves and the communities they serve. The labor shortage of these critical teachers means that those who need them most don't have access to them.
- o Many providers were forced to go out of business due to COVID-19 and others are struggling to stay in business.

General Audiences

- North Carolina's early care and learning network is a partnership of early childhood professionals and the people, organizations and agencies collaborating to prepare young children for success in life and support families as they work.
- More than 35,000 early care and learning providers, teachers and staff are central to raising North Carolina, impacting the lives of 265,000 young children and their families every year.
- The COVID-19 pandemic put a spotlight on the critical need for economic recovery, something that requires building on and strengthening North Carolina's early care and learning network. In 2021, North Carolina used federal funding to make a historic $805 million investment in Stabilization Grants to provide early care and learning programs with financial relief and help stabilize their operations.
- Even so, the network remains under strain and requires additional support to strengthen early childhood providers and teachers so they can raise North Carolina by serving more families.
- Raise North Carolina (RaiseNC.nc.gov) is a long-term public education campaign including social media, television ads and online ads in partnership with the many organizations and leaders that support our early learning network and educators.
- NCDHHS encourages North Carolina parents, caregivers, educators, advocates, businesses and policymakers to join in and take action by:
 - o Showing appreciation on social media for the early care and learning teachers and educators who serve young children and families each day. Use the hashtag #RaiseNC and tag @ncdhhs. Easy-to-use resources are available at RaiseNC.nc.gov.
 - o Sharing success stories that highlight the great work and positive impacts of early care and learning on children, families and communities.

- o Educating local communities about the importance of public investment in the state’s early care and learning network.
- o Learning more about the importance of the state’s early care and learning network and equipping fellow community members with information about Raise NC at RaiseNC.nc.gov.
